"I have a challenging child in my class who, after break would sometimes become disruptive. Once I asked him to walk in the line nicely. He completed the task but kept on talking and stopping. I decided to ask him why he had done that and he explained that he was angry. So I told him that he would need to learn to try and calm down as his anger could get him into more trouble. The next day as we walked up the stairs, I noticed that he had changed and was behaving. I was so happy that his attitude had changed and he had learned to calm down. He really did change his behaviour."
